“Is That My Mom Talking?”

“This program was full of lessons on how to be assertive in life, which the group embraced through their symbolic ‘karate chop.’ One participant in particular really struggled in her life to communicate effectively during conflict and difficult conversations. After practicing at CLIMB, she was able to express herself more effectively and better represent herself and her children.

Her classmates, who had been cheering her on in past attempts, celebrated her success. She was incredibly proud of herself and said her daughter looked at her during one particular conversation that happened outside of CLIMB as if to say, ‘is that my mom talking?”

We really tackled these complicated topics by examining how each participant handles things at work and at home. This approach helped our participants get more practice with how they want to show up in each setting.”

-- Stacie McDonald, Gillette Program Director

“This is a truly amazing program; a flame of hope for women who are in a seemingly desperate circumstance.”
