The CLIMB Support Network
“Right away, this group really opened up to each other and let the walls come down. I admired their courage to be so honest with themselves and address personal barriers that had been getting in the way their whole lives.

“Before CLIMB, I really felt invisible. But I was able to find my voice on the first day when people were talking about themselves. I realized I had things in common with other women and I wasn’t alone in experiencing what I had in life.” — Jennifer

Because of this openness, they were able to connect and bond in a really lasting way. The women really problem-solved together with life challenges and are already helping each other with childcare and day-to-day support.

They don’t take these healthy and safe relationships for granted because some of them haven’t ever had that before CLIMB. They really are like a family now, and these are bonds that will last long after graduation.”
